†7. Other was formerly used to characterize things as of a different kind from those previously mentioned: e.g. other sinful men = other men, who are sinful. Obs.

This would now be implied by its omission; in modern use the insertion of other implies the opposite, viz. that the second class includes the first.

†Other, conj. and adv.[2] Obs. Forms: 2–5 oþer, 2–6 other, 4–5 opere, othiro, othir, -yr(e, 4–6 uther; 6 oder, -ur. β. 4 oiper, oither. [The OE. word for 'or' (F. ou, L. aut, and sive or vel, G. oder) was oððe, earlier oðða (also eðða) = Goth. aiþþau, OS. eppo, oddo, OHG. eddo, edo, later odo, MHG. ode, oder, Ger. oder. The alternative 'either .. or' was expressed by oððe .. oððe. This form was superseded c 1130 by oðer (first in O. E. Chron., anno 1127; last example of oððe, in a sentence in which oðer also occurs, 1131). The MS. of the OE. transl. of Περὶ διδάξεων (1200–1225) has regularly oððer for OE. oððe.

Though the date of the first appearance of this conj. is so narrowly defined, its actual source remains a debated question. It has been held to be identical with the adj. pron. Other (see prec.), and (more frequently) with the adj. pron. Outher, OE. ðhwæðer, ðwðer, áðer. Both these pronominal words were indeed in OE. used anticipatively, to introduce the alternative oððe .. oððe .. (see Other adj. pron. B. 1 b, Outher adj. pron. 1 b); but there is no trace in OE. of ðwðer (áðer) or óðer taking the place of the first member of the alternative oððe .. oððe .., much less of both members, and least of all of the simple conj. oððe. On the contrary, the simple conj. remained invariably oððe, and the alternative (so far as the evidence shows) oððe .. oððe .., down to the abrupt substitution of oþer c 1130. It is true that in the 14th c., in northern, north-midl., and e.-midl. Eng., auþer, ouþer, began to take the place of oþer as first member of the alternative oþer .. oþer .., or oþer .. or .. (the second remaining as or, less usually oþer), just as later still (in Wyclif and Chaucer) either became the midland form of the first member; but these were changes several centuries later than the substitution of oþer for oððe c 1130, with which they have no historical connexion. It seems more probable that the oðer or oþer of 1130 was a modification of oððe itself, due to some association with words in -er; oððe being a stressless word was probably reduced in pronunciation to oðe (cf. OE. nalæs from nalles, sithen (1140) from siððan, etc.). Thus we are reminded of the parallelism of development between HG. eddo, edo, odo, ode, oder, and OE. eðða, oðða, oððe, (oðe*), oðer or oþer, and are led to suspect, for the r of German oðer and of ME. oþer, the same or a similar explanation. The form oððer used by the early 13th c. scribe of Περὶ διδάξεων may either be his accommodation of the oðde of his original to the oðer of his own day, or an actual intermediate form. It does not seem possible to fix the quantity of the o in ME. oþer, even from Ormin's spelling; but, if derived from oðde, oðe*, it was presumably short. Ormin's reduced form oþþr and orr (see OR conj.), and the later or, had, of course, short o, from which the ǫ of mod. emphatic or is regularly developed.

III. As auxiliary of predication.

5. The general verb to express duty or obligation of any kind; strictly used of moral obligation, but also with various weaker shades of meaning, expressing what is befitting, proper, correct, advisable, or naturally expected. Only in pa. t. (indic. or subj.), which may be either past or present in meaning. (The only current use in standard Eng.)

The subject is properly the person (or thing) bound by the obligation, which latter is expressed by a following infinitive (with, formerly also without, to), sometimes omitted by ellipsis. Followed by a passive infinitive, it expresses obligation on the part of some undefined or unexpressed agent, the subject in this case being the person, etc. to whom the obligation is due (e.g. parents ought to be honoured = it is a duty to honour parents).

a. In past sense: = Owed it to duty; was (were) bound or under obligation (to do something). Usually, now only, in dependent clause, corresponding to a preceding past tense in principal clause: he said you ought = he said it was your duty. (Cf. c below.)

a. c 1200 Ormin 19108 Annd tohh swa þehh ne cnew himm nohht þe werelld alls itt ahhte. 1297 R. Glouc. P.* (1862) 101 Of such a child wel glad heo was: as heo wel ou3te. 1388 Wyclif Isa. v. 4 What is it that Y ou3t [1382 aw3te] to do more to my vyner? 1553 Grimalde Cicero's Offices (c 1600) 140 Hee ought, in that case, to recompence him. 1692 E. Eng.* x. II. 592 To convince him that he ought to stay where he was. 1892 Law Times XCIII. 414/2 He [the judge] did not think that the defendant ought to be kept in prison any longer.

b. In present sense: = Am (is, are) bound or under obligation; you ought to do it = it is your duty to do it; it ought to be done = it is right that it should be done, it is a duty (or some one's duty) to do it. (The most frequent use throughout. Formerly expressed by the pres. t., Owe v. 5.)

This appears to be orig. the pa. subj. (which in ME. and mod.Eng. has the same form as the indic.) used first in hypothetical or general cases; e.g. Ought one to tell the truth under all circumstances? If it should rain, he ought not to go. If he cannot go to-day, he ought to go to-morrow. Thence, in definite present sense, as Tell me what I ought to do now. The use of the pa. subj. softens the form of the expression; cf. the parallel you should for it is your duty; also would you for will you; might I for may I; could you for can you.

In mod. Eng. only the possessive pronoun used adjectively, the absolute form being OURS. See the paradigm in I pron.

Ourself (auəɹse·lf), pron. Forms: see OUR and SELF. [A parallel formation to next, with self instead of selves, appearing first in 14th c.

It may have arisen out of our selven, through our selve, our self, finally with e mute, as in the infinitive of vbs. (e.g. holden, holde, hold); but, on the other hand, it may have been a distinct formation, with the uninflected self (cf. myself, ourself, with my own, our own).]

Emphatic and reflexive pronoun, corresponding to we, us, originally not differing in sense from OURSELVES; but subsequently differentiated, so as to be used mostly in those cases in which we refers to a single person or is not definitely plural; e. g. in royal, divine, or editorial utterance, or when used vaguely in the sense of one, oneself.

In mod. South Sc. ourself is collective, ourselfs is individual; e.g. 'we do everything ourself', but 'we'll settle it atween ourselfs'.

I. Emphatic. 1. Standing alone, as subject, as object direct or indirect, or in predicate after be, become, or the like.

-ous, suffix, repr. L. -ōs-us (-a, -um), forming adjs., with the sense of 'abounding in, full of, characterized by, of the nature of', e. g. cōpi-ōs-us plentiful, copious, dolōr-ōs-us full of sorrow, dolorous, fām-ōs-us famous, gener-ōs-us distinguished by descent, generous, glōri-ōs-us full of glory, glorious, spīn-ōs-us full of thorns, thorny, spinous, visc-ōs-us of the nature of bird-lime, sticky, viscous, etc. Latin stressed long ō passed in OFr. into a closer sound, intermediate between ō and ū, which was variously written o or u, less commonly ou; hence L. adjs. in -ōsus, which either came down in popular use, or were adopted at an early date, had in OF. forms in -os, or -us (-ous, , e.g. coveitos, -us, doleros, -us, envios, -us, glorios, -us, religios, -us. In the 13th c. the vowel-sound had changed to (ō) written eu, so that the suffix had now the form -eus (coveiteus, dolereus, envieus, glorieus, etc.); and this still later was written in the masc. -eux (conveiteux, envieux, glorieux, with fem. however in -euse), as still in modern F. In Anglo-Fr. and early ME. the forms were the same as in early OF. (coveitos, -us, envios, -us, glorios, -us), but the vowel was soon identified with OE. long ū, and like it written after 1300 ou (coveitous, envious, glorious), the spelling ever since retained, though the sound has passed through (-ūs, -us, -us) to -vs, -os. This -ous, having thus become the form of the suffix in all words from Norman Fr., became the established type for all those of later introduction, whether adaptations of Fr. adjs. in -eus, -eux, or L. adjs. in -ōsus but see -OSE[1], or new formations on the analogy of these, from Fr., L., or other elements.

These new formations are numerous in the Romanic languages. In French they have been formed freely, not only from L. sbs. which had no such derivative in ancient L., but also from French words themselves of L. origin, and from mediæval and modern words from divers sources. Many of these new formations have, in earlier or later times, passed (with change of -eux, etc., to -ous) from French into English. Such is the history, for example, of advantageous, adventurous, courageous, dangerous, gelatinous, grievous, gummous, hazardous, hideous, joyous, lecherous, matinous, mountainous, orgulllous, pulpous, ravenous, riotous, slanderous. This process has been continued in Eng. itself, where new adjs. in -ous have been formed, not only on Latin, Greek, and Romanic bases, but also on native Eng. words and on some of obscure origin; e.g. blusterous, boisterous, burdenous, feverous, murderous, poisonous, slumberous, thunderous, timous, troublous, wondrous.

In some words in late or med.L. the ending -ōsus was added to an adj., or at least a form in -ōsus is found beside the simple adjective, e.g. decōr-us, decorōs-us, dubi-us, dubiōs-us, in It. decoro, decoroso, dubbio, dubbioso. In the Romanic languages a few new forms of this kind appear; e.g. L. pi-us, F. pi-eux (as if from piōs-us*). But in English, this addition of the suffix has been greatly developed, and has become the ordinary mode of anglicizing L. adjs. of many kinds, esp. those in -eus, -ius, -uus, -er, -ris, -āx -āci-, -ōx -ōci-, -endus, -ulus, -vorus, -ōrus, e.g. aque ous, igne-ous, extrane-ous, herbaceous, consci-ous, obvi-ous, vari-ous, ardu-ous, exiguous, adulter-ous, auri fer-ous, armiger-ous, alacri-ous, hilari-ous, illustri-ous, capaci-ous, feroci-ous, stupend-ous, garrul ous, omnivor-ous, sonor-ous.

This tendency to represent a L. adj. by an Eng. form in -ous may have been strengthened by the fact that the 'dictionary-form' of the L. adj. is the nom. sing. masc., and that this in the majority of adjs. ends in -us, the Eng. pronunciation of which is the same as that of the Eng. word in -ous, so that the latter to the cursory observer appears to be merely an Eng. spelling of the L. It is evident however that igne-ous, for example, answers not only to L. igne-us, but to igne-a, igne-um, etc., and that the -ous is an additional element. And in comparing alacri-ous with alacer, hilari-ous with hilari-s, capaci-ous with capax, capāci-, the suffixal nature of the -ous is manifest.

b. In some words, -ous is a corruption of another suffix, e.g. in righteous, wrongous, courteous, gorgeous; in others, as bounteous, a contraction of an earlier suffix has taken place before -ous: see -EOUS.

c. In Chem., adjectives in -ous, formed on the names of elements, indicate acids and other compounds containing a larger proportion of the element in question than those expressed by an adj. in -ic: e. g. chlorous acid, sulphurous acid, cuprous oxide, ferrous salts, etc.: see -IC 1 b.

d. Nouns of quality from adjs. in -ous (however derived), are regularly formed in -ousness, as covetousness, consciousness, gorgeousness, righteousness; those from L. -ōsus have sometimes forms in -osity, as curiosity, generosity, porosity, viscosity; but this termination more frequently accompanies adjs. in -OSE[1].

Out, obs. form of Ought, Aught.

Out- in comb. is used with substantives, with verbs and their derivatives, and with other adverbs.

In OE. út adv. was already prefixed (1) to ordinary sbs. in the sense 'that is without', 'out lying', 'external', as in útland a country that is out, a distant or foreign land, úthere an army belonging to or coming from without, a foreign army; (2) to verbal sbs. and nouns of action and agent-nouns derived from verbal roots, as útfær, útfaru, útfereld, útgang, going out, exit, departure, útdrif expulsion, útdrǽfere one who drives out, úthlid carriage out, exportation, útryne running out, excursion, expiry; (3) to elements forming adjs., either related to the sbs. in 1, as útlende, útlendisc, outlandish, foreign, or derived from vbs. (ppl. adjs.), útiernende outrunning, purgative. In these 'nominal compounds' the stress was always on the prefix.

With verbs, út like other adverbs formed separable collocations or semi-compounds, in which the position of the adv. was shifted according to the construction of the sentence, as in the separable compound verbs of modern German (although in OE. the order was not yet so rigid). Thus, út followed the vb. in the imperative, as gǽt út! ádó út þone béam, and in the pres. and pa. indicative in the principal sentence, as he cymþ út, he eode út, ða flugon hi út. But in the dependent sentence, and in all other moods or parts of the vb., including the infinitive and pples., and all nominal derivatives, the adv. stood immediately in front of the vb.; thus ðá he út cymþ when he comes out, gif he út cyme if he come out, nú wille we út gán now will we go out, út gangendum ðam mónþe on the month going out. In OE. the adv. was regularly written separate; but in translations from Latin, compound verbs in ex- were sometimes rendered by compound vbs. in út- in which the adv. was not only joined, but even retained before the vb. in the principal sentence: e. g. Ps. xviii. 5, 'in omnem terram exivit sonus eorum', Vesp. Ps. 'in all eorðan útcode swocz heara'. The regular position of út before the vb. in the inf., gerund, and pples., naturally tended to make the collocation pass into a combination, esp. when these were used as sbs. or adjs.; and this is the cause why outgoing, outgoer, outgone belong in meaning to go out, outstretching, outstretched to stretch out, outgrowing, outgrowth to grow out, outlook, outlooker to look out. It is only in later Eng. that such collocations as a going-out dress, a clearing-out of cupboards, the bringers-out of a new play, a well thought-out article, have become possible.

As to the verbs themselves, in ME., usage became more lax. On the one hand, the adv. began to be placed after or away from the vb. in the subordinate sentence, the infinitive, etc.; on the other hand the older usage of the inf. in út gán, and the like, was often extended to the indicative, so that we find he out yede, the blod out brast. This was partly due to a general levelling and loss of old syntactical distinctions, so that beside he sprang out and then sprang he out, it became allowable also to say he out sprang and out sprang he, in both of which the adv. stands before the vb. These novelties in word order were especially employed by metrical writers as facilitating the exigencies of rhythm and rime, and it is chiefly in metrical compositions that they are found. But they also occur in translations from Latin, as e. g. in the works of Wyclif, in which L. vbs. in ex- are constantly rendered by Eng. verbs preceded by out. In ME. the elements were still commonly separated in writing; but modern editors have usually hyphened these collocations as compounds.

As a result of these various causes, there are numerous quasi-compound vbs. in out- in occasional use, chiefly poetical, in precisely the same sense as the ordinary prose form in which the simple verb is followed by the adv., e. g. out-pour = pour out. Not unfrequently, moreover, where out stands before a vb. as a mere metrical or poetical inversion, as in 'A frightful clamour from the wall out broke', 'Out went the townsmen all in starch', the two words, though merely inversions of broke out, went out, are hyphened as if compounds. The tendency so to treat them is probably strengthened by the existence of outbreak (sb.), outbreaker, outbreaking, outbroken, outcome, outcoming, and the like. But in these latter the position of the adv. is original, and the stress is on out, while in out broke, out went, the stress is on the vb.

On these accounts it is difficult to deal satisfactorily with the hyphened quasi-compounds in out-. Such as seem of importance, or occur as senses of out-verbs having other senses, are given among the Main words (where it is often indicated that they are not true compounds, or are only poetical); others are given in this article, but no attempt has been made to exhaust them. The same is true of vbl. sbs., and ppl. adjs. in -ing, ppl. adjs. in -ed, -en, etc., and agent-nouns in -er, which are permanent possibilities from any verb that can be followed by out, as in outgoing, outgone, outgoer, from go out.

True compound vbs. in out- are those in which it imparts the sense of outdoing, surpassing, exceeding, or beating in some action, as in outlive, outbid, outnumber, outface, and the various extensions of these contained in C. II. These are of later origin: a very few (e. g. outlive, outprofter outbid, outpass appear in the end of the 15th c.; they increase gradually during the 16th c. outrun in Tindale, out-cat, outgo, outride, outshine, outwear, in Pal-gr., and become numerous only c 1600, being freely and boldly employed by Shakspere, who is our earliest authority for many of them, including the curious group typified by 'to outfrown frowns', 'to out-Herod Herod'. It is not very clear how this use arose, or to what sense of out it is to be referred. But the earlier of these out-compounds were in nearly every instance preceded by a form with over-. Thus outlive (1472 was preceded in same sense by overlive (in OE.). F. survivre; outpass in 'the Water of Thamys outpassynge his boundys' (1494), was preceded by overpass = F. surpasser. It would seem therefore that out- has here the sense of 'beyond'. It is possible however that in outlive there entered in some association with Out 6 b, 23, as if it were 'to live to see another out' or at an end'. One who outbids another, bids beyond his rival until he drives him out of the contest. Cf. also the relation of the two notions in 'the ship outrode the storm', and 'the horseman outrode his pursuers', or 'he outrode all competitors in the race'.

A. Out- in comb. forming sbs.

I. in combination with ordinary sbs.

Of these a few existed already in OE., e. g. útland outside or outlying land, foreign land. Outland, útgársecg the outer ocean (see Ocean), útgemǽre extreme boundary, úthealf external side, outside, útweahl outlying wood; úthere foreign army, útwicing foreign pirate or viking. The number of these has in later times been greatly increased. Those of longer standing are written as single words; in the more recent, the two elements are usually hyphened, but they are also sometimes written separately, in which case out functions as an adj. = 'external, exterior, outlying, outer': see Out a. As the meaning is the same either way, the separation or hyphening of the two elements is in many cases optional. 23. a. In most of the groups 18–22, the compound vb. in out- may be cognate with the object, being formed either on the simple verb belonging to the object, or directly on the object itself, usually unchanged, but sometimes with a verbal ending (e.g. -ize). The object may be a person or a thing, and the sense is 'to outdo the agent in his own sphere or work', or 'to exceed or surpass the action, quality, or other thing'. Our earliest examples of this are from Shakspere, who has 'out-frowne Fortune's frowne', and 'out-villaind villanie'; it is rare in the 17th c., but greatly used in the 19th, when also those formed on adjs. appear. Thus, formed on vbs., to out-cook all cookery, out-beg a beggar, out-blunder former blunders; out-compete competition or competitors, out-rival a rival or rivalry. From adjs., to out-old the old, out-royal royalty. From sbs., to out-ambush ambushes, out-balderdash balderdash, out-blarney blarney, out-calvinize Calvinism, out-faminize famine, out-fiction fiction, out-horror all horrors; out-bishop the bishop, out-devil the devil, out-jingo the Jingo, out-saint the saint, out-usure the usurer. A few examples are added in chronological order to show the development of this usage.

b. Hence esp. with proper names of persons, nations, sects, etc., in the sense of 'to outdo the person, etc., in question in his special attribute'. The classical example is Shakspere's OUT-HEROD Herod; a few instances are found in the 17th c., esp. in Fuller, and in the 18th c. in Swift; but the vast development of this, as of so many other Shaksperian usages, belongs to the 19th c., in which such expressions have been used almost without limit. Examples are out-Achitophel, -Alexander, -Bentley, -Boniface, -Bonner, -Brutus, -Darwin, -Milton, -Mormon, -Nero, -Ottoman, -Quixote, -Sternhold, -Timon, -Toby, -Trollope, -Turk, -Zola, etc.; and, with verbal ending, out-Calvinize, -Germanize, -Gothamize, -Hobbesize, -Pantagruelize, etc. A few examples follow in chronological order to illustrate the growth of the usage.

† Outas, outes, sb. Obs. Forms: 3 uthes, -heis, -host, 4 outheys, 5 out(e)hees, outehese, 5-6 outas, 5-7 outes, 6 owtis, 7 outis. [Early ME. ūthēs, whence later outhees, -hese, and (with shortening of unstressed second element) outes, outis, outas; also, in 13th c., ūthest. App. representing an OE. út-hæs*, f. út out + hés command, bidding, *calling upon (any one) by name (from hátan to call by name, call upon), which also had in 13th c. the two forms hēs, hest: see HEST sb.

Common in 13th c. in legal documents in the Latin forms uthesium, huthesium, hutesium, and later huesium. These have been sometimes thought to be the source of the ME. word, and to be themselves of OF. origin, derived from huer, huier, to cry, hu, huée cry (hu e cri, hue and cry), which suits the sense perfectly. But hutesium cannot be etymologically accounted for from this source, nor is the word known in any form, Latin or vernacular, outside England. On the other hand, ūthēsium as a latinization of ME. ūthēs is quite in order. It is very likely, however, that hutesium and (still more) huesium are Norman Fr. alterations, due to association with hutz, hu, huée. Utheis, utheys are also most easily explained as Anglo-Norman formations from uthesium. As to the sense, ūthēs could hardly mean 'outcry', but might well be the 'calling upon' people to the pursuit of a thief or other ill-doer, which is the sense in the oldest and other of the quots. (Compare the expressions levare clamorem, levare huthesium, lever le hu.)]

An outcry, raised against a thief or the like, hue and cry; also, outcry generally, clamour.

†Ou·tfangthie·f. Old Eng. Law. Obs. In 2 utfangene þeof, utfangentheif; 3 utefang-, utfangen-, 3, 4 outfangen(e)-, -fange-, -thef. [Answers to an OE. type útfangenne þéof (accusative case) 'out-caught thief'; but the expression appears to have come into use later, to match infangenne þéof, Infangthief, q. v.] A franchise of a lord of a private jurisdiction, more extensive than that of Infangthief; originally, the lord's right to pursue a thief (at least when the latter was 'his own man') outside his own jurisdiction, bring him back to his own court for trial, and keep his forfeited chattels on conviction. But the right was variously defined or circumscribed in the 13th c., when its meaning seems to have already become conjectural.

The term infangenne þéof occurs in several OE. Charters, but of útfangenne þéof no trace has been found except in an alleged charter of Egbert dated 828 (Birch Cartul. Sax. No. 395), which has the Latin phrase 'cum furis comprehensione intus et foris' the apparent equivalent of an OE. 'mid infangenum þéofe and útfangenum'. But this is extant only in the Liber Roffensis (1120–50), and may be spurious, or the phrase may be a 12th c. interpolation. The term is wanting from an Eng.-Fr. Glossary of Law Terms compiled 1122–1150 (Wright Reliq. Antiq. I. 33) which contains 'Infangenethef—larum pris ens nostre tere'. On the other hand, utfangene þeof occurs in the forged Charter of Edgar to Glastonbury (Birch, No. 1277), which was in existence before William of Malmesbury made the third version of his Gesta Regum 1130–40 (in which the charter is given); and it may thus go back to 1100, or even earlier.

The etymological sense 'out-caught-thief', i. e. 'thief apprehended outside' (the jurisdiction), is that assigned to it in the Ripon record of 1228, in which the grant of 'infangethef et outfangethef' was explained as giving the grantee the right to try 'his own thief' ubicumque captum, whether within or without his territorial jurisdiction. But Bracton and Fleta explain it as the right to try thieves coming from without, and apprehended within the lord's jurisdiction; they both expressly deny that it meant a thief taken outside, or that such a thief might be brought back into the jurisdiction to be tried. Fleta however adds that, after his own thief had been condemned by the outside tribunal, the lord might bring him into his jurisdiction and hang him on his own gallows; and the right to do this appears to be all that Britton knows as 'the franchise of outfangenthef'.

Early legal use had forms identical with AFr.; but forms with outlaw-, conformed to the contemporary Eng. word also occur from 14th c.]

1. The action of putting a person out of the protection of the law, or the legal process by which a person is or was proclaimed or made an outlaw; the condition of one so outlawed. †In early use, often = exile, banishment.

'Outlawry, at first a declaration of war by the commonwealth against an offending member, [gradually] became a regular means of compelling submission to the authority of the courts, as in form it continued to be down to modern times'. 'Before the Conquest, outlawry involved not only forfeiture of goods to the king, but liability to be killed with impunity'. In the 13th c. 'outlawry loses some of its gravity; instead of being a substantive punishment, it becomes mere "criminal process", a means of compelling accused persons to stand their trial'. (Pollock & Maitland, Hist. Eng. Law I. 27, 459.) In the 14th c. the process was extended from cases of felony to misdemeanours and civil actions, so as to be a punishment for contempt of court in not appearing to answer an indictment or defend a personal action, or for disobedience to a judgement of the court. Outlawry for debt was frequent down to the 18th c. Along with this extension of the process, its conditions and consequence underwent continuous mitigation; in later times, in civil actions, it was reduced to the fact that the outlawed person was incapacitated from prosecuting an action for his own benefit, though he might still defend himself.

Clandestine Outlawries. In civil proceedings, outlawry has long been obsolete, and was formally abolished by the Civil Procedure Acts Repeal Act of 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 59). While it was in use, great injustice was often done in consequence of the insufficiency of the machinery for giving public notice of the fact that a defendant in a personal action had, as a result of civil process, been made an outlaw. In 1588–9, Act 31 Eliz. c. 3 was passed 'for the auoyding of secret Outlawries in Actions Personall against the Queenes Subiects'. This being subsequently considered insufficient, amending measures were introduced; and one such bill has had the singular fortune to become the formal instrument of asserting the right of Parliament to proceed to business without reference to the immediate cause of summons, by being introduced and read a first time as the first business of every session, before the reading of the King's or Queen's Speech. This precaution goes back to early times, being referred to as an established practice in 1603. Formerly some one bill was used for the purpose on each occasion; but since 1 Dec. 1743, the means uniformly employed has been a Bill 'for the more effectual preventing Clandestine Outlawries in personal actions'; and this is still annually introduced, although the outlawries against which it is directed have long disappeared.

Du. has analogous uses of uitlegger, -ligger 'outlier'; but the later date of this prevents it (notwithstanding Dampier's assertion: see sense 2) from being viewed as the source of the Eng. word.

Du. uitlegger 'outlier' appears in Kilian, 1599, only in the sense of 'stationary guard-ship lying out in front of a port, etc.' From 1671 (Witsen Scheeps-bouw 55 a) it is found in a sense akin to 1 below. The 'outrigger' of the Indian seas (sense 2) is described in Du. works from c 1600 without any name; in Valentijn Oud en Nieuw Oost Indien I. 2 (1724) it is called vlerk (i. e. wing), the name still in common use; but beside it the name uitlegger is found in Dutch dictionaries of the 19th c. (Twent Zeemans Woordenb. 147 b, 1813, etc.) Thus, so far as yet known, both uses of uitlegger are later than the corresponding senses of the Eng. word.]

Out of (au·tɒv), prep. phr. Also 1–4 út of, 4–out o, (7– o'), 4–7 out a; 4–6 oute, owt, e of. [orig., and still in writing, two words, viz. the adv. OUT followed by the prep. OF (in its primary sense = from). In analysis out of is precisely on the same level with the obs. down of, up of, and the current forth of, out from, out to, down from, and other instances of an adv. followed by a prep. which defines its relation to an object. But in OE. as in OS. and the Scandinavian langs. út of (OS., ON. út af, Sw. ut af, Da. ud af) became the regular equivalent of L. ex, Gr. ἐξ, ἐκ (while Ger. and Du. used the adv. itself as a prep.); out of has thus acquired a unity of sense and also of pronunciation, which entitle it to separate treatment, whereby also its own sense-development can be more distinctly exhibited.

The history of out of is partly parallel to that of in to, with the differences that the latter is now written into as one word, and that out of is the opposite, not only of into, but also of the static in. One reason why out of has not needed to be written as one word may be that the distinction now made between into and in to is in the case of out expressed by out of and out from: thus 'they came in to me, into my house', 'he went out from me, out of my house'.]

1858 Simmonds *Dict. †Ou·tputter[1]. Obs. [OUT- 8.] One who puts out.

1. One who puts or pushes out.

Outputter and outcputter are here applied to the same person. Either of these may be a misprint for the other, or the words may be used as synonyms: cf. PELT, PULT, PUT vbs. The passage (which, as printed, is incoherent and corrupt) purports to be from a prophecy of Merlin, in which outputter may have been the orig. word. The precise sense is not determinable.

5. A term applied to certain maintainers and abettors of thieves or freebooters.

In 9 Hen. V, it appears from the context to be applied to persons in Redesdale who maintained and fitted out thieves for depredations in the adjacent counties: cf. senses 3 and 4. Bp. Jackson seems to have understood and used it of persons who put out their neighbours' cattle or goods into places handy for thieves with whom they were in league: cf. OUTPUT v. 1 b, quot. 1615. But the out-putters of 1421 were not the neighbours of the persons robbed, but felons living beside the thieves in Tynedale and Redesdale.

1421 Supplic. Commons Northumbld., Cumbld., & Westmld. in Rolls of Parlt. 9 Hen. [i.e. divers persons, thieves, and felons called Intakers and Outputters, dwelling within the Liberty of Redesdale, in which Liberty the King's writ does not run] a 1640 JACKSON Creed XI. xl. § 8 He is a more cunning thief which can steal without an outputter or receiver, than he which always is enforced to use the help of one or other. 1664 SPELMAN Gloss. s.v. Intakers, Quos Outparters vocant ..recentius Outputters nuncupati.

Note. Rastell's Eng. transl. of the Statutes (ed. 1543) reads in the Act of 1421 'felons called yntakers and outparters', an obvious misprint, which was however repeated in all editions previous to that of Ruffhead in 1763 (which retains 'outparters' in the text with 'outputters' in the margin). Hence 'outparter' was accepted as a genuine word by Cowell, who in his Interpreter further identified the 'outparter' with the thief, with which erroneous explanation the bogus word has duly reappeared in the Law Dictionaries down to Wharton, as well as in Phillips, Kersey, Bailey, Ash, Crabbe, Ogilvie's Imperial Dict., Century Dict., and Funk's Standard Dict.; it was eschewed by Johnson and Webster. As if one error were not enough, Wharton has also Outputer, with an explanation founded upon the latter part of Cowell's article, but making 'man or house' into 'manor-house'(!). This last blunder is taken over from Wharton by Cassell's Encycl. Dict., Ogilvie, and Century Dict. (all professing to take it from Cowell). In Hodgson, Hist. Northumbld. pt. II. I. 60, the 'outparters' of 1543 appear in a new guise as 'outpartners', erroneously said to be used in the Supplication of 1421, which has Out-putters.

1607 COWELL Interpr., Outeparters, anno 9. H. 5. ca. 8, seemeth to be a kind of theeues in Ridesdall, that ride abroad at their best advantage, to fetch in such catell or other things, as they could light on without that liberty: some are of opinion that those which in the forenamed statute are termed out-parters, are at this day called outputters, and are such as set matches for the robbing of any man or house: as by discovering which way he rideth or goeth, or where the house is weakest and fittest to be entred. See Intakers. 1658 PHILLIPS, Outparters, a sort of theeves about Ridesdale, that ride about to fetch in such cattel or other things as they can light on; [ed. 1706 adds, and make Matches for the robbing of Men and Houses]. 1823 CRABB Technol. Dict., Out-parters (Law), a sort of freebooters in Scotland, who used to ride out and seize whatever they could which came in their way. 1848 WHARTON Law Lex., Outparters, stealers of cattle. Ibid., Outputers, such as set watches for the robbing any manor-house. 1882–90 Ogilvie's Imperial, & Century Dict., Out-parter. In old law, a cattle-stealer. Out-putter. In old law, One who set watches for the robbing of any manor-house. Cowell.

Ovary (ōv·vări), sb. [ad. mod.L. ōvāri-um: see prec. In F. ovaire masc. (1690 Furetière).]

1. Anat. and Zool. The female organ of reproduction in animals, in which ova or eggs are produced.

1658 SIR T. BROWNE Pseud. Ep. III. xxviii. (ed. 3) 225 The ovary or part where the white involveth it, is in the second region of the matrix. 1677 H. SAMPSON in Phil. Vade M. (1842) 559 The Ovaries are two oblong flattened and oval bodies of a whitish colour, situated in the posterior layer of peritoneum of the broad ligaments. 1878 HUXLEY Physiogr. xiv. 226 The female bird possesses an organ termed the ovary, in which nucleated cells, the primitive ova, which correspond with the embryo cells of the plant, are developed.

2. Bot. The organ in which the ovules of an angiospermous plant are produced, being the lowest part of the pistil in the flower, consisting of one or more carpels, which ultimately becomes the fruit or seed-vessel; the germen.

When separate from the calyx, it is termed a superior ovary; when adherent to the calyx, an inferior ovary.

† O·vary, a. Obs. [Erroneous for L. ovālis, OVAL a.[2]] Of or pertaining to an ovation.

a 1682 SIR T. BROWNE Tracts ii. (1683) 91 Their honorary Crowns triumphal, ovary, civical, obsidional, had little of Flowers in them.

Ovate (ō·vĕt), sb. [f. an assumed Latin plural Ovātēs, representing Οὐάτεις, vātēs, soothsayers, prophets, mentioned by Strabo, along with Δρυίδαι 'Druids', and Βάρδοι 'Bards', as a third order in the Gaulish hierarchy. Cf. EUHAGES.]

A term used as the English equivalent of Welsh ofydd, now applied to an Eisteddfodic graduate of a third order, beside 'bard' and 'druid'; the name and its application being artificially affiliated to those of the Gaulish Οὐάτεις mentioned by Strabo.

Note. Οὐάτεις was Strabo's Greek transliteration of the Proto-celtic vātεis* (Stokes), pl. of vātis* (or uātis*) 'soothsayer, prophet' = L. vātis, OIr. faith, mod. Ir. and Gael. faidh. Ofydd occurs in Middle Welsh as a second element in some compounds, where it appears to have the sense of 'lord' (app. for ddofydd, mutated form of dofydd). It is also the Welsh form, in 14th c. bards, of the proper name Ovid. It has no connexion, etymological or historical, with Οὐάτεις. The imaginary connexion appears first in Henry Rowlands in 1723. From him it was taken up by Edward Williams (Iolo Morgannwg) and W. Owen (Pughe) who introduced ovate as the English equivalent, 1792-4.

1723 H. ROWLANDS Mona Antiqua 65 Different Classes and Fraternities, which, as Strabo (lib. iv) reckons, were three, that is Δρυίδαι, Drudau or Drudion; Ουάτεις, Offwyr or Offyddion; and Βαρδοι Beirdd. Ammianus Marcellinus (lib. xv) gives the same reckoning..'inchoata per Bardos, Euvates, & Druidas', i.e...begun and set by Bards, Euvates, and Druids. — Ibid. Of these, says Strabo, the Bardi were Singers; the Ouvates, Priests and Physiologers; and the Druids to Physiology added Ethicks and Moral Learning. Ibid. 251 Their Ovates, so call'd by Strabo and Ammianus Marcellinus,..must express some Name they had at that Time on one of their Orders, sounding like Owydd or Offydd. 1792 W. OWEN (PUGHE) Elug. Llywarc Hen, Introd. xlii, Bardd, Owydd, a Derwydd = Bard, Ovate, and Druid. 1794 E. WILLIAMS Poems II. 230 There are three orders of the Primitive Bards. — The Ruling Bard, or Primitive Bard positive..: the Ovate (or Euvate..) whose avocation it is to act on the principles of inventive genius: and the Druid [etc.]. 1834 PLANCHÉ Brit. Costume 11 The Priesthood..was divided into three orders. The Druids, the Bards, and the Ovates. .. The Ovate or Ovydd, professing astronomy, medicine, &c., wore green, the symbol of learning. 1877 RHYS Lect. Welsh Philol. vi. 314 Ofydd..is defined to be an Eisteddfodic graduate who is neither bard nor druid, and translated into ovate.

SMITH Strata Ident. 8 Ovate Echini .. may be found anywhere on the surface of Upper Chalk. 1874 COOKE Fungi 62 Pear-shaped or ovate asci.

b. In reference to a superficial figure.

1760 J. LEE Introd. Bot. I. xiv. 2. In combination with another adj., indicating a modification of the form denoted by the latter, inclining to ovate: as ovate-acuminate, -conical, -cordate, -cuneate, -deltoid, -elliptic, -lanceolate, -oblong, -rotundate, -serrated, -triangular, etc.

b. The OE. use, in quot. 893, is sometimes expressed in ME. and mod.Eng. by over following the time phrase; as in all the year over, the whole day over. Cf. the corresponding local use in sense 7 d. In the temporal use, over, being appended to a phrase which is itself an adverbial adjunct, may with equal propriety be viewed as an advb.: cf. 'he works in the field all day', with 'he sings at his work all day over', i.e. all day from beginning to end.

Over, sb.[2] [Absolute use of Over adv.]

1. (nonce-use f. Over adv. 11.) That which is excessive; an excess, extreme.

Over (ō·vəɹ), a. Forms: α. 1 ufera, -e, 2–3 ufere, 3 vuere (= uvere) (mod. dial. uvver). β. 3–5 ouere, 4 7 ouer, 5– over. [OE. had ufer(r)a, -e, yfer(r)a, -e adj., the former of which survived in early ME. ufere, uvere (written vuere, uuere), for which in writing over(e was substituted bef. 1300. (Cf. OHG. obaro, MHG. obere, Ger. ober, which represents an OTeut. uβaro-, while the OE. forms repr. the types uβarōzo-, uβirōzo-*.)

Dialectally, the form uvver (ʊ·vəɹ) is still widely current for the adjective (see E. D. D.); so that the ME. spelling overle (as in the later Layamon text for the earlier uvere) may originally have been only graphical, ov (ou) for uv (uu, vu), as in above, dove, love, etc. But in ME. the adj. fell together in use with Over- adv. in comb., from which indeed it cannot always be separated, many important examples being written either way; thus, the OE. ufera lippa, in mod. dial. uvverlip, occurs in Chaucer MSS. as overle lippe and overlippe. This would naturally tend to level the pronunciation of over from ufera with that of over- from OE. ofer-, a result prob. completed in Standard Eng. during the ME. period. And this identification led further to the adjectival use of the adverbial prefix in other senses: e.g. 3, 4.

Although originally itself a comparative form, over having no positive of its own has been in some respects treated as positive, and has been compared Overer Overest (so OHG. obarðro, obarðst, mod.Ger. oberer, oberst), and Overmore, Overmost, only the last of which is now in (occasional) use. See these.]

Over- is used with adverbial, prepositional, and adjectival force, in combination with sbs.; with adverbial and prepositional force in comb. with verbs; with adverbial force in combination with adjs., advbs., and prepositions. Its combinations are therefore exceedingly numerous, and, from the wide range of its meaning, very diverse in character. The following are the chief classes; but many words have senses falling under two, three, or more of these, and there are individual words in which the original sense of the prefix is so modified that it is difficult to assign them to any class. In some of its uses, moreover, over is a movable element, which can be prefixed at will to almost any verb or adjective of suitable sense, as freely as an adjective can be placed before a substantive or an adverb before an adjective. Although usually hyphened or even written as one word, such combinations are hardly dictionary facts; they are really syntactic combinations which make the use and construction of over in the particular position more clear and obvious. In some of these combinations, however, there is a closer unification of sense, and others have a long history which it is desirable to show. All important combinations of over-, therefore, including such as occur in more than one sense, and all such as seem to require explanation, are treated as Main words in their alphabetical places; of the unimportant or obvious ones, examples are here given under the classes to which they belong, with a few illustrations; but no attempt is made to enumerate all that have been used, much less all that are possible.

Ofer- (like ufar- in Gothic, ubar- and ober- in OHG., ofar in OS., über in Ger., over in Du., yfer-, ofr-, of- in ON.) was already in OE. used in comb. with vbs., as oferclimban, ofercuman, oferdōn, oferdrincan, oferlibban; with sbs., as ofercealdorman, oferbrū, ofersegl, oferslop, oferwrit, oferlufu, oferbiternes; with adjs., as ofergylden, ofermæte, ofermōdiz, oferhlīdne, oferfull, ofermicel; also in advbs. formed from adjs., and in derivatives of phrases, as ofersēllc, ofersæwise from ofer sē. Many of the OE. compounds are still in use, but the more part failed to live into ME., and the great majority of existing over- combinations are of later formation, chiefly since c 1550.

For the original stress of verbal and nominal compounds respectively, and later modifications, see OUT-. As over is of two syllables, there is necessarily a subordinate stress on o, even in verbal compounds, where the main stress is on the root syllable. This rises in sense 27 to a distinct secondary stress, distinguishing e. g. over-bē'nd 'bend too much' from ōverbe'nd 'bend over'. In verse, the unstressed over- is often reduced to o'er-, a single stressless syllable, as o'erbe'nd, o'ersha'dow; but over- with main or secondary stress is not properly reduced to o'er- unless the position allows the stress to be retained, as in o'er-ena'moured, o'er-incu'rious, o'er-assu'mption, o'er-repletion. See senses 27–30.

I. Over- in spatial and temporal senses, and in uses directly related to these.

1. With verbs, or with sbs. forming vbs., in the sense 'over in space, on high, above the top or surface of', as OVERBROOD, -CANOPY, -DROP, -HANG, -SOAR, etc. Also (b) in sense of 'rising above, overtopping', as OVER-RISE, -TOP, -TOWER; and (c) with the sense of position implying other notions of which it is a condition or element, as OVEREYE, OVERLOOK, OVERJOY, OVERWEEP, which see.

The compound verb is equivalent sometimes to the simple vb. with over adv., as in OVERLAY, to lay (something) over; or, more frequently, to the simple vb. (usually intr.) with over prep., as in OVERHANG, to hang over (something), OVERLIE, to lie over or above (something); but in many cases, as OVERARCH, it is difficult or impossible to distinguish these.

Examples: overbi'llow, -bra'nch, -cap, -cluster, -crown, -dangle, -dome, -droop, -frown, -glint, -helm, -hover, -leer, -pentise, -plumb, -spire, -stoop, -surge, -tip, -turret, -vista, -wave, etc.

25. With the sense 'exceedingly, beyond measure, lavishly'. In verbs, often rendering L. super-, as OVERABOUND, -FLOURISH, -GLAD, -GRIEVE, -HIGH, -HOPE, -JOY, etc. In adjs., as OVERDEAR, over-exce'lling, over-glo'rious. Now obs. or arch., the sense having usually passed into 27.

a 1656 BP. HALL Invis. World III. i, Those *over-excelling glories of the good Angels. 1633 FORD 'Tis Pity V. v, How *over-glorious art thou in thy wounds, Triumphing over infamy and hate!

26. With the sense 'to a greater extent, or at a greater rate, than is usual, natural, or intended; too far'. In verbs, as OVERACT, -BID, -BUY, -CARRY, -COUNT, -ENTER, -ESTEEM, -ESTIMATE, -HOLD, -LAUNCH, -LET, -PAY, -PRIZE, -RATE, -SELL, etc. In adjs., as OVERAWFUL, etc.

27–30. With the sense 'in or to excess, too much, too'. Now a leading sense of over- in combination with verbs, adjectives, substantives, and adverbs.

In mod.Eng. very common with a negative (esp. in adjs. and their derivatives), as in not over-brave, not over-obliging, 'he was not over-pleased with the result'; in which not over- is said by litotes for 'not quite enough', 'somewhat deficiently': not over-wise = rather wanting in wisdom.

This sense was approached in Gothic by the adj. ufarfulls 'full to overflowing', and the vb. ufarwahsian 'to grow exceedingly' (repr. Gr. ὑπερανξάνειν); it was frequent in ON., expressed by ofr-, of-, before adjs, nouns of quality and action, rarer with vbs.; occasional in OHG. (ubarezzan, ubartrinchan, -trenkan, ubarfullî: cf. MHG. ubervol). In OE. it occurs in many adjs., a few vbs., and numerous derivative or other sbs. In OE. and the cognate langs., over was in true combination; its generalized use in mod. Eng. renders it much more a distinct element, often merely in syntactical combination, so that, except in a few words of old standing, it is usually hyphened to the word which it qualifies.

In verbs, there is a distinct secondary stress on over- which may, in case of antithesis or emphasis, become the main stress. Adjectives, substantives, and adverbs have normally even stress: o'ver-a'pt, o'ver-abste'mious, o'ver-wo'rry, o'ver-o'ften; either stress being liable to be subordinated, according to the construction and emphasis. Thus, an o'ver-a'pt scholar, we think him o'ver-a'pt; we want culture, not o'ver-cu'lture. In this sense, over- is rarely contracted in verse to o'er-, and properly only where the stress can be retained, as in o'er-ena'moured.

27. With verbs (or with sbs. or adjs. forming verbs). A few occur in OE., e.g. oferdo̊n, -drencan,

-drincan, -fyllan, -sieman, -sprecan (some of which however only approach this sense, or can be otherwise explained). ME. added to these, a 1300, OVERCARK, -CHARGE (F. surcharger); a 1400 OVERHEAT, -LADE, -PRAISE, -RUN, over-dread, -sup; a 1500 OVERDRIVE. In the 16th century they began to abound, as OVERBLOW, -BOIL, -BURDEN, -BUSY, -CLOY, -CRAM, -DARE, -EAT, -FEAR, -GORGE, -LABOUR, -LOAD, -LOVE, -PLEASE, -REACH, -ROAST, -WOO, over-bake, -black, -cull, -dull, -itch. By 1600 it had become allowable to prefix over- to any vb. whose sense admitted of it, so that we find, besides those entered as Main words:

a 1700 over-afflict, -argue, -cherish, -chill, -cleave, -commend, -confute, -creed, -doze, -engage, -expect, -fancy, -feel, -fix, -gird, -grace, -grasp, -honour, -know, -linger, -loath, -magnify, -marl, -meddle, -mix, -moisten, -multiply, -nourish, -oblige, -pamper, -preface, -promise, -prove, -reward, -sauce, -sol, -store, -thick, -till, -vilify, -worship, etc.

28. With adjectives, simple or derivative.

These appear already in OE. and the cognate langs. In OE. nearly 30 examples are recorded, including ofer-hlīde, ofer-eald, ofer-ealdˇ, ofer-fætt, ofer-full, ofer-grædig, ofer-hēah, ofer-hlīd, ofer-nicel, ofer-rane; ofer-æte, -etol, ofer-sprecol, ofer-genge, ofer-mōdig, ofer-mōdlīc, etc. In OE. these were treated as true compounds. In ME. over was often written separately, and its use began to be extended beyond the words handed down from OE. Since c 1500, the tendency has been to treat over as a movable element which can be prefixed at will to any adj.; and in Sc. and north. Eng. dialects, where ower, owre is the regular equivalent of Standard Eng. too, it is always written as a separate word. In literary English it is usually hyphened, exc. in a small number of combinations of ancient standing and frequent use, which are usually written as single words: e. g. OVERFOND, OVERFULL, OVERMUCH, etc. But even in literary Eng., over is sometimes treated as a separate word, and the consciousness that it is such is seen in the colloquial strengthened form over and above, 'not over and above particular'.

The more important of these are treated as Main words: see OVERACTIVE, -BITTER, -BOLD, -BUSY, etc. Other examples are: Of OE. age overblithe.

c. (In full, Overseer of the poor.) A parish officer (appointed annually) to perform various administrative duties mainly connected with the relief of the poor.

The office was created by Act 43 Eliz. c. 2, and the duties were defined to include causing able-bodied paupers to work, giving relief to the disabled poor, putting poor children to work, apprenticing them, etc., and raising by rate the necessary funds for these purposes; the chief duties now are to assess, collect, and distribute the 'Poor Rate' (the actual relief of the poor in most cases now belonging to the 'guardians of the poor': see GUARDIAN 1 b), to make out the lists of voters for parliament and for municipal and other councils, jury lists, etc. The office belongs to England and Wales, and is gratuitous, but, where the duties require it, paid or assistant overseers are appointed. Overtake (ōvəɹtē·k), v. [Early ME. f. OVER- 14 + TAKE v., q. v. for Forms.

Overtake is the earliest exemplified of a small group of synonymous vbs., including overnim, overhent, overget, overcatch, in all of which the second element means take or catch; the original application being apparently to the running down and catching of a fugitive or beast of chase: cf. the synonymous 'catch up'. The sense of over- is not so clear. A priori we might explain it as 'to take by over-running, or by getting over the intervening space', and compare overreach = reach over or across a space. But it is doubtful whether this was the original notion. Beside these -take verbs, a fig. sense of overtake (viz. 4 below) was expressed before 1000 by overgang and overgo; but in these over- can be explained in the sense 'down upon' (OVER- 7), so that their orig. sense would be 'descend' or 'fall upon'. The sense of 'overtake' was expressed later also by overhie, overrun, overhale, overhaul; but these prob. imitated overgo or overtake. In Early ME. overtake and overgo had the parallel forms OFTAKE, OFGO, which seem to have been the strictly southern equivalents (oftake being actually exemplified earlier than overtake): the relation between of- and over- here, as well as in OFTHINK, OVERTHINK, has not been clearly determined.]

1. trans. To come up with (a person or thing going or running in front of one and in the same direction); to come up to in pursuit; to 'catch up'.

b. In the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, and in the supreme court of other Presbyterian churches: A formal motion proposing or calling for legislation.

In current use, an overture is a proposal to make a new general law for the Church or to repeal an old one; to declare the law; to enjoin the observance of former enactments; or generally to take any measure falling within the legislative or executive functions of the Assembly. Such a proposal must first be made in an inferior court (presbytery or synod), and, if there adopted, is transmitted by that court as its overture to the supreme court. If adopted by the supreme court as an overture, it is submitted to the various presbyteries for approval by them or a majority of them before it can be passed as an act.

Owe (ōu), v. Forms: see below. [Comm. Teut.: OE. ágan, pres. ic áh, pa. ic áhte = OFris. (âga), âch (hâch), âchte, OS. égan (êh), êhta, OHG. eigan, ON. eiga, á, átta, Goth. aigan, aih, aihta: one of the original Teutonic preterite-present verbs (see Can, Dare, Dow, May). The OTeut. aig-, aih-, answers to a pre-Teut. aik-, ablaut-grade of ik-, the original stem of the present: cf. Skr. ij to possess, own. This vb. now survives only in Eng. and the Scandinavian langs. (Sw. äga, ega, Da. eie to own, have). In Eng. it has undergone much change both of form and sense. The original preterite inflexion of the present tense (áh, áht áhst, áh, ágon) began in late OE. and early ME. to be supplanted by the ordinary pres. tense forms (e.g. 3rd sing., áhð, aweþ, oweþ, awes, owes, pl. ágað, ageþ, oþeþ, oweth, etc.); and in mod.Eng. the tense is entirely thus levelled, owe, owest, owes, -eth, owe. The OE. pa. t. áhte, ME. âhte, ôhte, survives as ought; but before 1200 this began to be used (in the subjunctive) with an indefinite and hence present signification, in a special sense, and thus gradually came to be in use a distinct verb from owe (for which see Ought v.); its function as pa. t. of owe being supplied in 15th c. by owed. The orig. pa. pple. in all the Teut. langs. became an adj., of which the mod. Eng. form is Own a.; but as a pa. pple. OE. ágen was still used in 16–17th c. as owen, oune. A later pa. pple. aucht, ought, conformed to the orig. pa. t., is found from the 14th c.: see Ought v. 7. The current pa. pple. is owed; so that the whole verb has now the ordinary weak conjugation owe, owed, owed. The change of signification from habēre to débēre can be best traced in the scheme of senses below; but the primitive sense 'have, possess' is not yet extinct in the dialects, which use awe or owe = own, and have not entirely lost the connexion of owe and ought.

Ought, being now in Standard English practically a distinct word, has been fully treated in its alphabetical place, and is not dealt with here; but, for the historical development, the two articles Owe, Ought, should be read together.]

II. To have to pay.

This branch and the next were expressed in OE., as in the other Teutonic langs., by the vb. sceal, pa. t. scolde, int. sculan (Goth. skal, skulda, skulan), mod. Eng. Shall, Should. The first traces of the mod. use appear in the Lindisf. Gloss., which renders L. débēre where the Rushw., like the later Ags. Gosp., uses sculan by the phrase ágan tó geldanne 'to have to pay'. Examples are wanting during the following two centuries to show the stages by which this was shortened to the simple ágan, which is found by 1175 in full use, both in the sense 'to owe (money)', and 'to have it as a duty', 'to be under obligation (to do something)', in both taking the place of OE. sculan. (See also Ought v. 2, 5.) The result was that shall gradually ceased to have the sense 'owe', retained that of obligation with a weaker force, and became mainly an auxiliary of the future tense; while ágan, ażen, oȝen, owen, owe, in taking débēre as its main sense, has in Standard Eng. lost that of habēre, or handed it over to the cognate Own, which shares it with have and such Romanic synonyms as possess.

2. To be under obligation to pay or repay (money or the like); to be indebted in, or to the amount of; to be under obligation to render (obedience, honour, allegiance, etc.). Const. with simple dat. or to. (The chief current sense.)
